[Ethics and Justice: Journal of Legal Culture]

Mission and Scope

The Journal is devoted to exploring the relationship between ethics and justice, both within the framework of general legal theory and in the context of legal practice. The topics under investigation include the role of ethical principles in the creation and interpretation of legal norms; the fairness of behavior in private and public law relationships; the ethical responsibilities of parties involved in conflict resolution; legal ethics and the duties of lawyers; judicial ethics and the accountability of judges; the concept of law as a relational practice; the principle of cooperation; the philosophy of dialogue; and the interrelations among law, legal procedure, and morality. The Journal aims to promote a legal culture rooted in the ethical dimension of law, oriented toward the construction of a just legal system that effectively addresses the real needs of individuals.
